INTRODUCTION.

§ 1. AMONGST the numerous Middle-English poems by anonymous authors which have come down to us, The Tale of Gamelyn is worthy of particular attention for several reasons. In the first place, it is a good example of the kind of story which was at one time very popular. It is, essentially, a lay, i. e. an older and longer kind of ballad, and has a certain connection with the famous set of ballads relating to Robin Hood. In the second place, it is a good example of the Middle-English of the fourteenth century, and exhibits a dialect not far removed from that which, in process of time, has become the standard literary language. Lastly, it has an additional interest on account of its peculiar connection with our two greatest poets, Chaucer and Shakespeare. The nature of this connection will be discussed presently.

§ 2. I am not aware that the original of the present version of the Tale can be precisely pointed out. Stories which relate the fate of a younger brother who is deprived of his inheritance by the jealousy of a senior brother, and who nevertheless achieves great prosperity, are as old as the time of Joseph. If there is anything peculiar in the present tale, it is that the second brother takes part with the younger rather than with the elder; for popular stories usually represent the youngest of three sons as being the only one who comes to any good. I should be inclined to believe that the tale is not the invention of its author, but was derived, like the Lay of Havelok, from a French original; whilst at the same time there are some traces of Scandinavian influence.

The names which occur in it are very few, but are worth a moment's consideration. The father of the three sons is called Sir Johan of Boundes, but there is nothing to indicate the locality of the place so named. In fact, Boundes is probably merely the plural of bound, so that the name is equivalent to Sir John of the Marches or of the Border-land, and we hence obtain no information except that bound is a word of pure French origin, from the Old French bonne, a limit<sup>1</sup>. It is true that one MS. in the Cambridge University Library (marked Ii. 3. 26) has the reading burdeuxs, i. e. Bourdeaux; but this must have been due to the substitution by the scribe of a familiar for an unfamiliar name. The three sons are named Johan, Ote, and Gamelyn. Of these, Johan or John, though ultimately Hebrew, is practically French; we can all remember King John. Ote also appears elsewhere as Otes; see note to l. 727, on p. 46. It is certainly a shortened form of Otoun, the name of a French knight vanquished by the famous Guy of Warwick; and Otoun is merely the French form of Othonem, the accusative of the Latin Otho (cf. G. Otto). The only other names are those of the third son Gamelyn, and of Adam, the 'spencer' or steward of the household. In connection with the latter of these, it is worth remarking that Adam Bell was a famous outlaw. The name of Gamelyn is worthy of more particular examination, because it is here that we have a trace of Scandinavian influence and, at the same time, a point of contact with the ballads that concern Robin Hood.

§ 3. The name Gamelyn can hardly be other than gamel-ing, the literal meaning of which is 'son of the old man.' The suffix -ing is a common patronymic suffix in Anglo-Saxon; as is, perhaps, nowhere more remarkably shewn than in the Old Northumbrian version of the third chapter of St. Luke, where we read, for instance, of David, 'se wæs iessing, se wæs obeding,' i. e. who was the son of Jesse, who was the son of Obed. The word gamel, old (also spelt gamol, gomel, gomol), occurs occasionally in Anglo-Saxon poetry, but is, strictly, a Scandinavian form. The word for 'old,' in Icelandic, is invariably gamall<sup>2</sup>; in Swedish, gammall; and in Danish, gammel. The name is extremely appropriate, because Gamelyn is evidently considered as being the son of his father's old age<sup>1</sup>, and considerably younger than his brothers<sup>2</sup>. It is remarkable that the name is still in use; I find the spellings Gamlin and Gamlen in the London Directory for 1884, and the latter form appears in the Clergy Directory and over a shop-door in Cambridge. It may also be assumed to form a part of the word Gamlingay, which is the name of a village between Cambridge and Bedford. It is further interesting as indicating a connection between our tale and the part of England most subject to Scandinavian influence; in other words, it concerns the Eastern, not the Western portion, of our island.

§ 4. It can hardly be doubted that the name Gandeleyn which occurs in a ballad entitled 'Robyn and Gandeleyn' is a mere corruption of Gamelyn. In the present tale, Gamelyn becomes an outlaw, lives in the wood, and is made master over all the outlaws under the king of the outlaws himself (l. 686). In the ballad<sup>3</sup>, we have a very remarkable account, quite different from the usual one, of the death of Robin Hood, who is shot by a certain Wrennok of Doune. Gandeleyn, who calls Robin Hood his 'mayster,' encounters Wrennok, and challenges him to a trial of skill in archery:—

'Qwerat xal our marke be?'
 Seyde Gandeleyn:
 'Eueryche at otheris herte,' Seyde Wrennok ageyn—

an answer of intense significance. Thereupon Wrennok discharges his arrow, but it passes harmlessly between Gandeleyn's legs, who at once shoots Wrennok through the heart, exclaiming:—

'Now xalt thu neuer 3elpe<sup>4</sup>, Wrennok,
 At wyn ne at ale
 That thou hast slawe goode Robyn
 And Gandeleyn his knave<sup>5</sup>.'

<sup>3</sup> Printed in Ritson, Ancient Songs and Ballads, i. 81; and in Child's English and Scotch Ballads, v. 38. I have used the latter copy.

But this is not the only example of the name's occurrence. It is quite clear that the Young Gamwell in the Ballad of Robin Hood and the Stranger is the Young Gamelyn of our tale. This remarkable ballad tells of a fight with swords between Robin Hood and a stranger. The stranger wounds Robin, who thereupon demands his name.

The stranger then answer'd bold Robin Hood,
 'He tell thee where I do dwell;
 In Maxwell town I was bred and born,
 My name is young Gamwell.

For killing of my own father's steward
 I am forc'd to this English wood,
 And for to seek an uncle of mine,
 Some call him Robin Hood.'

'But art thou a cousin of Robin Hood then?
 The sooner we should have done.'
 'As I hope to be saved,' the stranger then said,
 'I am his own sister's son.'

Hereupon they become excellent friends; and Robin Hood tells Little John that he will make young Gamwell one of the crew, saying:—

'But he shall be a bold yeoman of mine,
My chief man next to thee.

Young Gamwell then takes the name of Will Scadlock; so that Gamelyn is thus curiously identified with the Will Scathlock, Scadlock, or Scarlet, whose name is tolerably familiar to all who have heard of his more famous master. The sequel of the ballad is somewhat curious. Robin Hood, Little John, and Will Scadlock (as he is now called) go to London to rescue a certain princess, and are matched to fight against three giants, whom they of course slay. The princess is married to Young Gamwell, whom the Earl of Maxfield (not Maxwell, as before) recognises as his lost son. It is easy to see how the same general ideas can be infinitely varied by ballad-writers who had a clear licence to introduce any details which their imaginations could suggest. The Scottish reference to Maxwellton is not happy, and indicates a late date.

§ 5. The most remarkable point is, perhaps, that the 'master outlaw' in the tale of Gamelyn is left unnamed. This is a mark of a somewhat early date. Professor Child well remarks that 'no mention is ever made of him [Robin Hood] in literature before the latter half of the reign of Edward III.' In fact, the earliest notice of him is in the B-text (second version) of Piers the Plowman (Pass. v. l. 402), which cannot be earlier than about A. D. 1377.

Even more curious than the absence of name for the outlaw, is the absence of any indication of locality. In these days, we at once associate the outlaw with Sherwood Forest<sup>1</sup>; and the ballad of Robin Hode and Queen Katherine represents Robin Hood as saying:—

'I will not leave my bold outlawes for all the gold in Christentie;
in merry Sherwood Ile take my end,
vnder my trusty tree.'

Percy Folio MS., ed. Hales and Furnivall, i. 45.

When Robin Hood has a difficulty with a sheriff, it is usually the sheriff of Nottingham. The fact that The Tale of Gamelyn introduces us to a nameless king of outlaws living in a nameless wood is an indication, as far as it goes, of early date, and suggests that the ballads are indebted to the Tale rather than the converse.

§ 6. Again, the introduction of the wrestling-match, in which Gamelyn vanquishes the champion, reminds us of Havelok's feat in 'putting the stone' twelve feet further than all the other 'champions<sup>2</sup>.' The marvellous way in which Gamelyn lays about him, at one time with a 'pestle' (l. 128) and at another with a 'cart-staff' (l. 500), reminds us of Havelok's feat in killing twenty men with the bar of a door (Havelok, ll. 1794—1859). It is highly probable that the author of the Tale was acquainted with the Lay of Havelok, which is clearly connected

Sent, with preter-human luck,
Missiles, not of steel but fir-wood,
Through the two-mile-distant buck.'

Charade on Out-law; by C. S. C.

with Lincolnshire. This furnishes a faint indication of the part of England to which the Tale possibly belongs.

Another hint is to be obtained from the Vocabulary. The number of words of Scandinavian origin are but few; the chief are:—a-twynne, 317; awe, s. 543; bone, boone, 149, 153; caste, 237, 245; cast, s. 248; deyde, 68; felaw, 227, 276, 571, pl. 811; ferd, 854; lawe, 544; litheth, 1; loft, 127; nyggoun, 323; rape, adj. 101; raply, rapely, 219, 424; rewthe, 508; reysed, 162; serk, 259; skeet, 187; weyuen, 880. Some of these occur in Chaucer, viz. a-twynne, bone, caste, deyde, felaw, lawe, rape (but only as a sb.), rewthe, reyse, weyued, but there is a small residue of words that indicate a more Northern dialect. Thus awe occurs in Wyclif, Hampole, Robert of Brunne, the Towneley Mysteries, the Ormulum, Havelok, Wallace, and the Bruce; the Southern form being eye (A.S. ege) which, curiously enough, also occurs in our poem. Ferd is likewise a Northern word; it occurs in Wyclif, Minot, Hampole, and even in the Romaunt of the Rose, which exhibits the Northern suffix -and for the present participle, and cannot be by Chaucer, as some have imagined<sup>1</sup>. Nyggoun is only known to occur here, and in Robert of Brunne's Handlyng Synne, ll. 5340, 5578, where it is spelt nygun. Serk is the well-known Northern sark; and skeet occurs in the Ormulum, the Northern version of Alexander, Havelok, Sir Gawain, &c. The scarcity of Scandinavian words is easily accounted for by the shortness of the poem.

I must not omit to observe here that (as was kindly pointed out to me by Mr. Kington Oliphant) a certain line in Gamelyn which occurs twice over (see ll. 277, 764) is quoted almost exactly from A Poem on the Times of Edward II. This poem exists in two copies which differ considerably; one of these was printed by Mr. Wright for the Camden Society in 1839, in the volume entitled Political Songs (pp. 323-345), from 'the Auchinleck MS. written in the beginning of the reign of Edward III'; the other was printed by the Rev. C. Hardwick for the Percy Society in 1849, from the MS. preserved in St. Peter's College, Cambridge. I refer to the former of these editions, in which l. 475 runs thus:—

'But bi seint Jame of Galice, that many man hath souht.'

I have little doubt that the author of Gamelyn was acquainted with this poem, and it is interesting to note a few further points of resemblance. Thus the expression in the fen (Gamelyn, 588) may be illustrated by ll. 142, 143 of the Poem, which stand thus:—

'The porter hath comaundement to hold hem widoute the gate in the fen.'

The expression so brouke I, so common in Gamelyn (ll. 273, 297, 334, 407, 489, 567), occurs in the Poem, l. 187:—

'For als ich euere brouke min hod vnder min hat.'

The expression euel mot he the (Gam. 363) occurs in the Poem, l. 232. The expression had doon a sory rees (Gam. 547) may be compared with 'and maken there her res' in the Poem, l. 248; cf. also l. 434. The expression Cristes curs mot thou have (Gam. 114, 116) is just like that in the Poem, l. 310—'Godes curs moten hii haue.' Other phrases and words occurring in the Poem are par seinte charite, l. 128 (misused for pour sainte charite); muchele schrewes, l. 406; for feerd (= ferd), l. 17; god chep, l. 405; barre (of justice), l. 343; haluendel, l. 316; gamen, l. 367; mot-halle, l. 292. See also the note to Gamelyn, l. 871. Such phrases and words are not particularly uncommon, but the actual coincidence of a whole line is remarkable; and we may safely conclude that Gamelyn was written after (but probably not long after) this Poem, which Mr. Hardwick says 'may be fairly assigned to somewhere about the year 1320.'

§ 7. We will now consider the incidental connection of the Tale with the poet Chaucer. It so happens that all the copies of it which have been preserved occur in MSS. of the Canterbury Tales, but it is by no means found in all of them. In three of the best MSS., viz. the Ellesmere MS., the Hengwrt MS., and the Cambridge MS. marked Gg. 4. 27, it does not appear. In the first of these, the imperfect Cokes Tale is followed by a blank space, and the next written page begins with The Prologue of the Man of Lawe. In the second, the Cokes Tale has, at the point where it breaks off, the significant note—'Of this Cokes tale maked Chaucer na moore,' and the rest of the page is blank; the next page begins with The Prologue of the Wyf of Bathe. In the Cambridge MS. nearly all of leaf 193 is cut out, and leaf 194 begins with the tenth line of the Man of Lawes Prologue, which must have followed the imperfect Cokes Tale immediately. To these may be added the Cambridge MS. marked Dd. 4. 24, which also ignores the Tale of Gamelyn. On the other hand, it is found in the following ten MSS. at least, viz. the Harleian MSS. nos. 7334 and 1758; the Royal MSS. 18 C. ii and 17 D. xv; MS. Sloane 1685; MS. Lansdowne 851; the Petworth MS.; the MS. in Corpus Christi College, Oxford; and the Cambridge MSS. marked Ii. 3. 26 and Mm. 2. 5. It always appears in the same place, i.e. in the gap left in Chaucer's work by his omission to finish the composition (or, more probably, the revision) of the Cook's Tale. In the well-written Harl. MS. 7334, which affords much the best copy, the scribe, after writing out the 58 lines of the Cokes Tale, is careful to leave the rest of the page blank; and repeats this precaution at the end of Gamelyn. There is, in fact, no connection between this Tale and any work of Chaucer, and no reason for connecting it with the Cook's Tale in particular, beyond the mere accident that the gap here found in Chaucer's work gave an opportunity for introducing it. It is quite clear that some scribes preserved it because they thought it worth preserving, and that it must have been found amongst Chaucer's MSS. in some connection with his Canterbury Tales. We can hardly doubt that he had obtained a copy with the view of making good use of it, and the various copies now extant all agree so closely that they must have been due to a single original. As I have already said once before<sup>1</sup>, 'some have supposed, with great reason, that this Tale occurs amongst the rest because it is one which Chaucer intended to recast, although, as a fact, he did not live to re-write a single line of it. This is the more likely because the Tale is a capital one in itself, well worthy of having been re-written even by so great a poet. . . . But I cannot but protest against the stupidity of the botcher whose hand wrote above it "The Cokes Tale of Gamelyn"<sup>2</sup>.'

That was done because it happened to be found next after the Cook's Tale, which, instead of being about Gamelyn, is about Perkin the reveller, an idle apprentice.' My remarks continue with the words—'The fitness of things ought to shew at once that this Tale of Gamelyn, a tale of the woods, in the true Robin-Hood style, could only have been placed in the mouth of him "who bare a mighty bow," and who knew all the usage of woodcraft; in one word, of the Yeoman. And we hence obtain the additional hint, that the Yeoman's Tale was to have followed the Cook's Tale, a tale of fresh country-life succeeding one of the close back-streets of the city. No better place can be found for it.' I was much interested in finding, not long ago, that Urry, who first printed the Tale of Gamelyn in 1721, has already said the same thing. At p. 36 of his edition of the Canterbury Tales, he remarks: 'In all the MSS. it is called the Cooke's Tale<sup>1</sup>, and therefore I call it so in like manner: But had I found it without an Inscription<sup>2</sup> and had been left to my Fancy to have bestow'd it on which of the Pilgrims I had pleas'd, I should certainly have adjudged it to the Squire's Yeoman: who tho as minutely describ'd by Chaucer, and characteriz'd in the third Place, yet I find no Tale of his in any of the MSS. And because I think there is not any one that would fit him so well as this, I have ventur'd to place his Picture before this Tale, tho' I leave the Cook in possession of the Title.'

§ 8. It remains to be added that the weight of evidence, even in the MSS. themselves, is actually against assigning this Tale to the Cook. I have already said that, in MS. Harl. 7334, such assignment is not in the handwriting of the original scribe. In the Corpus MS., there is no remark except 'Incipit Fabula.' The Royal, Sloane, and Petworth MSS. all call it 'The Tale of 3ong Gamelyn,' and introduce it abruptly with two spurious and halting lines, as follows:—

'But here-of I will passe as now
And of 3ong Gamelyne I wil telle 3ow.'

The Lansdowne MS. introduces it with the following miserable doggerel :—

'Fye þer-one, it is so foule, I will nowe tell no forþere,
For schame of þe harlotrie þat seweþ after;
A velany it were þare-of more to spell,
But of a knyhte & his sonnes My tale I wil forþe tell.'

It is true that, at the end of Gamelyn, we find, in four of the six MSS. printed by Mr. Furnivall, such rubrics as 'Here endith the Cokis tale,' 'Here endeþ the tale of the Coke' (twice), and 'Explicit fabula Coci;' but these remarks are of no value, because the rubricator and the scribe were usually different people, and we constantly find, in MSS. of this period, that the rubricator inserts a wrong capital letter even where the scribe has actually written a very small letter in the corner of the blank space for his information. Here, in like manner, the writers of the rubrics have not observed that the scribes gave them no authority for writing what they did. It is a case of mere carelessness. Similarly, in the Cambridge MS. Mm. 2. 5, the story is simply headed 'The Tale of ʒonge Gamelyn,' but the rubricator who inserted the head-lines has continued the title 'The Cokes Tale,' without any authority, throughout the tale of Gamelyn as well. Hence, when we actually come to such a note as that which precedes Gamelyn in MS. Royal 17 D. xv, viz. 'Her endeth o tale of the Cooke and her folowyth a-nother tale of the same cooke,' we are quite sure that it is a mere blunder, signifying nothing. All the evidence that is worth having certainly informs us that the full correct title is 'The Tale of Yong Gamelyn,' and nothing else. The word 'Yong' may, however, be omitted, and it is now usual to do so.

§ 9. The occurrence of the Tale in such an early MS. as MS. Harl. 7334 is at once a good proof of its antiquity; whilst at the same time Chaucer must have come by a copy some years before his death (A. D. 1400). When we compare the language with that of Robert of Brunne, who died in 1340, there is no apparent reason why 'Gamelyn' should not have been written at least as early as 1350. Certainly, Robert of Brunne did not himself write Gamelyn, for he would never have penned ll. 491, 492 of the story; but we shall do well to consider the great influence of this writer, so ably dwelt upon by Mr. Kington Oliphant, who calls him 'The Patriarch of the New English.' (See Old and Middle English, by T. L. Kington Oliphant, 1878, p. 448.) The peculiar metre points to a similar conclusion; it is rough and irregular, but it is just the same as that which we find in Robert of Gloucester's Chronicle, written in 1298, in the so-called Lives of the Saints sometimes attributed to the same author<sup>1</sup> and written about the same time, and in the earlier<sup>2</sup> part of the translation of Langtoft's Chronicle by Robert of Brunne, made between 1327 and 1338. When, in course of time, this metre became perfectly regular, it produced the 'common metre' of our psalm-books and, it may be added, of our ballads. The 'Alexandrine' line of Drayton's Polyolbion is a mere variety of the same, due to the employment of only three accents instead of four in the former half of the line. It is a considerable defect of the metre of Gamelyn that the number of accents in the line is variable. This metre was less in favour towards the end of the fourteenth century, being to some extent superseded, first by the line of four accents as employed by Chaucer in his House of Fame, and by Barbour in his Bruce, and secondly by the line of five accents as employed by Chaucer in his seven-line stanzas, and still later in his couplets. On the whole, I think we may roughly date the Tale of Gamelyn near the middle of the fourteenth century.

§ 10. The connection between the Tale of Gamelyn and Shakespeare's As You Like It, is easily explained. It so happens that none of the black-letter editions of Chaucer contain the Tale, which was, in fact, never printed till 1721, but MSS. of Chaucer circulated amongst readers, and in this way Thomas Lodge became acquainted with it<sup>3</sup>, and founded upon it the former part of a certain novel entitled Euphues' Golden Legacy. Whence he obtained the latter part of the same work does not appear, but it is not improbable that he had it from some Italian novel; for I should hardly be inclined to suppose that it was, after all, of his own invention. It is well known that Shakespeare's play is almost entirely founded on Lodge's novel; and the reader is particularly referred to the copious extracts from Lodge which are given by Mr. Aldis Wright in the Introduction to his edition of As You Like It. As my present object is to shew to what extent Lodge (and indirectly Shakespeare) was indebted to the old tale, I here subjoin such an analysis of Lodge's work as may suffice to indicate the chief points of resemblance.

<sup>3</sup> He certainly made use of a MS. which gave the name of the old Knight as Sir John of Burdeux (Bourdeaux). I have not as yet met with this in any other than the Cambridge MS. li. 3. 26, which has the spelling burdeuxs. Mr. Wright says vaguely that 'some MSS. have this reading'; but I suspect this is because he partly collated this very MS. Shakespeare merely follows Lodge.

§ 11. The following is, accordingly, a short sketch of the story as it appears in the novel by Thomas Lodge, entitled 'Euphues golden Legacie, found after his death, in his Cell at Silexedra, bequeathed to Philavtus Sonnes, nvrsted vp with their Father in England'; London, 1592<sup>1</sup>.

Sir John of Bourdeaux, Knight of Malta, had three sons, Saladine, Fernandine, and Rosader. On his death-bed, he leaves to the eldest 'foureteen ploughlands, with all my Mannor-houses and richest plate'; to the second, twelve ploughlands; and to the youngest sixteen ploughlands, as well as 'my Horse, my Armour, and my Launce.' Saladine is envious of Rosader, and keeps him in a servile condition, with but little education. In course of a few years, Rosader, 'perceiving his beard to bud<sup>2</sup>, for choler began to blush, and swore to himselfe he would be no more subject to such slaverie. As he was thus ruminating of his melancholie passions, in came Saladyne with his men . . . Sirha, (quoth he) . . . what, is my dinner readie<sup>3</sup>?' Rosader replies, 'Doest thou aske mee, Saladyne, for thy Cates? aske some of thy Churles who are fit for suche an office<sup>4</sup>.' Saladine says to his men, 'You, sirs, lay holde on him and binde him, and then I wil give him a cooling carde for his choller<sup>5</sup>. This made Rosader halfe mad, that stepping to a great rake<sup>6</sup> that stood in the garden, hee laide such loades upon his brothers men that hee hurt some of them, and made the rest of them run away. Saladyne, seeing Rosader so resolute . . . thought his heeles his best safetie, and tooke him to a loaft<sup>1</sup> adjoyning to the garden, whether Rosader pursued him hotlie<sup>2</sup>.<sup>2</sup> Saladine deprecates his anger, and adds: 'say wherein thou art discontent and thou shalt bee satisfied<sup>3</sup>.' Accordingly, they are reconciled, and 'went into the house arme in arme together<sup>4</sup>.'

This reconciliation, feigned on the part of Saladine, continued till Torismond, king of France, appointed 'a day of Wrastling<sup>5</sup> and of Tournament to busie his Commons heades,' and to turn their thoughts from their former king Gerismond, whom he had driven into banishment. A Norman champion is the challenger; and Saladine bribes him to kill Rosader if he can get the opportunity. Having done this, he persuades Rosader to go to the tournament, taking with him his father's lance, sword, and horse<sup>6</sup>. The twelve peers of France are present at the tournament, together with Alinda, the king's daughter, and Rosalind, daughter of Gerismond. After the tournament comes the wrestling, when the Norman champion violently overthrows and kills the two sons of a franklin of the country<sup>7</sup>. Rosader comforts the franklin, and offers to try and avenge their deaths; the franklin thanks him 'with promise to pray for his happy successe<sup>8</sup>.' The champion recognises Rosader, and strains every nerve to subdue him; but is himself violently overthrown and slain<sup>9</sup>, which 'highly contented' the franklin<sup>10</sup>. Rosader's name and birth are made known<sup>11</sup>, and Rosalind falls in love with him. Rosader also falls in love with Rosalind, and sends her a sonnet.

Saladine is expecting to hear of Rosader's death, when 'he cast up his eye, and sawe where Rosader returned with the garland on his head, as having won the prize, accompanied with a crue of boon companions: greeved at this, he stepped in and shut the gate<sup>12</sup>.' Rosader 'ran his foot against the doore, and brake it open<sup>1</sup>: drawing his sword, and entring boldly into the Hall, where he found none (for all were fled) but one Adam Spencer an English man, who had beene an old and trustie servant to Sir John of Bourdeaux<sup>2</sup>, and who took Rosader's part. Rosader invites all the company to a feast, saying, 'I tel you Cavaliers, my Brother hath in his house five tunne of wine<sup>3</sup>, and as long as that lasteth, I beshrew him that spares his liquor<sup>4</sup>.' After a great frolic, the guests depart<sup>5</sup>. Adam brings about a reconciliation between the two brethren, feigned (as before) on the part of Saladine.

The story next tells of Rosalind, and presents us with a long soliloquy, in which she laments her father's captivity, and admits to herself that Rosader is 'both beautiful and vertuous.' Here enter King Torismond and his daughter Alinda. Torismond, distrusting Rosalind, banishes her from the court; Alinda pleads for her, but without success, and is herself banished for taking her part.

Alinda and Rosalind depart, the former taking the name of Aliena, and the latter that of Ganimede, in the character of Aliena's page. In their travels, they reach the forest of Arden, whither the banished king Gerismond had also repaired. There they find two shepherds, Montanus and Coridon<sup>6</sup>, the former of whom is in love with Phoebe. Aliena buys Coridon's farm, that she and Ganimede may dwell in peace.

Meanwhile Saladine, always on the watch to get the better of Rosader, went one morning to his chamber, 'which being open, hee entred with his crue, and surprized his brother when he was a sleepe, and bound him in fetters, and in the midst of his hall chained him to a post<sup>7</sup>.' He leaves him two or three days without food<sup>8</sup>. Adam Spencer takes pity upon Rosader, brings him food secretly, and sets him at liberty<sup>9</sup>. Rosader proposes to attack Saladine at once<sup>10</sup>. But Adam reminds him that the next day is to be a great feast-day, and persuades Rosader to resume his place in the fetters, promising to leave them unlocked, and to have ready 'a couple of good pollaxes, one for you and another for mee<sup>1</sup>, adding—'when I give you a wincke<sup>2</sup>, shake off your chaines, and let us plaie the men.' This plan is adopted; and Saladine shews the guests Rosader in chains, alleging that he is mad<sup>3</sup>. Rosader pleads for their pity, but not meeting with success, waits for the signal. This being given, he drops his fetters, and he and Adam seize the pole-axes, and drive all out of the house<sup>4</sup>. Rosader and his friends feast and make merry<sup>5</sup>. Saladine escapes, and applies to the sheriff for help, who takes with him 'five and twentie tall men<sup>6</sup>,' and makes for the house. Adam and Rosader determine to make resistance<sup>7</sup>; and, sallying out, break through all opponents, and make good their retreat to the forest of Arden<sup>8</sup>. They suffer from hunger, and are ready to despair, but encourage one another. Rosader says he will go and search the forest, in hope of obtaining assistance; and finds the banished king Gerismond, who 'with a lustie crue of Outlawes lived in that Forrest,' and was then making a feast to 'his bolde yeomen<sup>9</sup>.' Rosader boldly addresses the company, with a threatening aspect. Gerismond has pity on him, and Rosader goes to fetch Adam, whom he finds in a fainting state; whereupon he 'got him up on his backe, and brought him to the place.' Gerismond hears all Rosader's story<sup>10</sup>, and reveals his own name; finally, he makes Rosader 'one of his forresters<sup>11</sup>.' Gerismond is sad at hearing the news of the banishment of Alinda and Rosalind.

Torismond hears of Rosader's flight, and learns that Saladine is now sole heir (as he supposes) to Sir John of Bourdeaux. He determines to quarrel with Saladine, and seize all his property. He sends for Saladine, accuses him, and casts him into prison. Next follows Saladine's soliloquy in prison. The king sends for him, reproves him, and banishes him. Saladine resolves to find out Rosader, and be reconciled to him.

Rosader recalls his love for Rosalind, writes sonnets, and carves his mistress' name upon the trees in the forest. He is found by Aliena and Ganimede, who eagerly enquire who is meant by 'Rosalind.' After a while, Rosader reads them three sonnets in Rosalind's praise. Ganimede instructs Rosader how to woo Rosalind, and offers to personate her for the purpose.

Meanwhile Saladine reaches the forest, where he falls asleep, and is espied by a lion, who waits for him to awake. Rosader, coming by that way, slays the lion. Saladine, without recognising Rosader, tells who he is, and expresses deep contrition. Rosader reveals himself, and they are truly reconciled. Rosader presents Saladine to Gerismond, and also conducts him to Adam Spencer. Owing to these events, Rosader sees nothing of Ganimede for three days, when they again meet and discourse.

Meanwhile certain rascals, who prowled about in the forest, determine to seize Aliena and present her to the king, in hope of some reward. Rosader comes to the rescue of Aliena and Ganimede, but is wounded and nearly overpowered; at this instant Saladine also arrives, and the robbers are put to flight. Ganimede dresses Rosader's wounds, whilst Aliena and Saladine discourse tenderly. Aliena and Ganimede, left to themselves, condole with each other on their fortunes. Coridon appears, and brings them to a thicket where they may see Montanus wooing Phoebe, who rejects him scornfully. Ganimede approaches her, and reproves her; but with the strange result that Phoebe is enamoured of Ganimede.

Saladine finds Aliena and Ganimede, and says that his brother's wounds are 'dangerous, but not mortall.' Saladine woos Aliena, and is accepted.

Phoebe falls ill for love of Ganimede. Montanus, hearing of it, leads Ganimede to Phoebe's house. Phoebe confesses her love, whereupon Ganimede says—'I will never marry my-selfe to woman but unto thy-selfe.' After this, Ganimede, meeting Rosader, who is now nearly recovered, tells him that he shall see his Rosalind shortly. The marriage-day of Saladine and Aliena is fixed upon, Gerismond and his foresters being invited to the marriage; Montanus and Phoebe are also present. Gerismond hears the story of Montanus's passion, his rejection by Phoebe, and the love of Phoebe for Ganimede. Ganimede is presented to the king, who is at once reminded of his daughter Rosalind, and sighs. Rosader sighs as deeply, saying that he loves none but Rosalind. Ganimede obtains from Phoebe a promise to marry Montanus, if she can by any means be cured of her present passion. Thereupon Ganimede retires, and re-appears in woman's attire, falling at her father's feet. At once two more weddings are agreed upon, that of Rosader with Rosalind, and that of Montanus with Phoebe. Aliena then reveals herself as Alinda, daughter of Torismond.

Whilst the triple wedding-feast is proceeding, Fernandine (the second brother<sup>1</sup>) suddenly arrives from Paris, with the startling news that the twelve peers of France are up in arms to dethrone Torismond, and that a battle is imminent, close at hand. Gerismond and the three brothers hurry to the battle-field, where the appearance of Gerismond in person decides the strife, Torismond being slain in the battle. The king is restored to his throne<sup>2</sup>, and creates Rosader heir-apparent to the kingdom, makes Saladine duke of Nemours, Fernandine his own secretary, Montanus lord of Arden Forest, Adam captain of the king's guard, and Coridon master of Aliena's flocks.

§ 12. The variableness of the metre renders the poem difficult to scan, and in some places raises doubts as to the grammatical force of the final -e. But the grammar will be found to resemble that of Chaucer rather closely, though it is in some points less regular, being of a somewhat more Northern character. The reader may consult the Metrical Analysis of the Squire's Tale, given at p. lxxvii of my edition of The Prioresses Tale (third edition, 1880), and there marks at the end of the Introduction to Dr. Morris's edition of Chaucer's Prologue, &c. Each verse is divided into two parts by a metrical pause, denoted in this edition by a raised full stop (·); my marking of the metrical pause is to some extent arbitrary, since the MSS. mostly omit it. It occurs, nevertheless, in several instances, and the assistance to the reader is so great that I have not hesitated to insert it throughout. In MS. Harl. 1758, for instance, we find a slanting stroke / introduced as a metrical mark after a-nother, l. 444; hider, l. 531; maister, l. 668; maister, l. 669; brother, l. 727; and togider, l. 899. In the Petworth MS. such marks are fairly abundant; thus, in the passage contained in ll. 21-58, consisting of 38 lines, only 13 lines are unmarked; so that there is quite sufficient authority to guide us to the right method of division. In considering the scansion, it will greatly assist us to consider each half-line separately. If, then, we denote an accented syllable by A, and an unaccented syllable by b, it will be found that, omitting the less regular lines, the commonest types for the first half-line are the following.

(1) AbAbAb; as in l. 12:—

Hów his children schóldë.

So also ll. 15, 21, 22, 23, 26, 28, 49, &c.

(2) bAbAbA; as in l. 37:—

And fór the lów' of Gód.

So also ll. 50, 51, 69, 71, 88, 93, 105.

(3) bAbAbA b; as in l. 2:—

And yé schull' hér' a tálkyng.

So also ll. 9, 17, 19, 27, 29, 32, 42, 61, 64.

The above are half lines of three accents; but four accents occur also, chiefly in the following types.

(4) AbAbAbA; as in l. 120:—

Gámelyn was wár anón.

So also ll. 123, 135, 139, 252, 280, 282, 306. Also ll. 199, 207, where Good-ë marks the vocative case.

(5) AbAbAbAb; as in l. 34:—

Bót' of bálë gód may séndë.

So l. 118, 336.

(6) bAbAbAbA; as in l. 6:—

The éldest wás a móchë schréw'.

So also ll. 55 (neyhëbours being a trisyllable), 62, 80, 94, 96, 99, 100, 107, 109, 125, 136, 153, &c.

(7) bAbAbAbAb; as in ll. 31, 58:—

And séydë, síre, for gódde's lówë.
That wás my fádres héritágë.

Most of the further variations are caused by the slurring of a slight syllable which is practically superfluous; or, on the other hand, by the omission of an unaccented syllable. The former of these processes is simple and common. Thus, in l. 18, we have :—

To hélpe délen his lóndes, where the two syllables italicised are run together, and the line is practically of type no. 3.

It is the other process, the omission of a syllable, which jars so disagreeably upon the modern ear. Thus, e. g., in l. 23, we have the half-line :—

Ón his déth-bédde.

And again, in l. 41, the half-line :—

Tho létë théy the kníght lýen.

And, in l. 68, the half-line :—

And déydë whán týmë cóm.

Yet the fact is, that this unpleasant effect is by no means uncommon in our nursery rimes, where, through old association, it is hardly noticed as a defect. In the rime of ‘Sing a song of six-pence,’ which has exactly the lilt of many lines in Gamelyn, the last line usually runs—And snápp’d óff her nóse. We cannot doubt that the old poem was considered, in its time, sufficiently musical.

§ 13. The latter half-line is usually shorter, and less varied. A large number of them will be found to conform to the types above containing three accents, viz. nos. 1, 2, and 3. Like no. 1 are the latter halves of ll. 3, 9 (lyuedé being trisyllabic), 16, 17, 20, 41, 50, 58, 64, 73, 74, &c. Like no. 2 are the latter halves of ll. 1, 7, 8, 26, 32, 34, 35, 36, 44, 45, 87, 88, &c. Like no. 3 are the latter halves of ll. 10, 18, 19, 28, 39, 42, 57, 63, 68, &c. But some half-lines are still shorter, and present a type similar to no. 1 when docked of its last syllable, so as to become AbAbA. Examples are : ón his fáire féil, 76 ; nówther zóng ne óld, 79 ; and in ll. 107, 109, 128, 131, 132, 135, 136, &c. When an unaccented syllable is dropped, we even get such half-lines as—sík thér he láy, 11 ; sík thát he láy, 21 ; whán he góod cówdë, 48 ; he láy stóon-stíllë, 67 ; and the like. Whether the number of accents in the latter half-line is ever allowed to be diminished to two, may perhaps be doubted. I suspect that, in reciting the lines slowly, a fictitious additional accent was placed upon the italicised syllables in such half-lines as :—by sé-ÿnt<sup>1</sup> Mar-tÿn, 53 ; wálk-ÿng-ë tháre, 89 ; be bé-ten anón, 115 ; and árt so yíng, 148 ; a rárn and a rýng, 172 ; to wéndë ther-tó, 173. But this is a slippery matter, which I leave to the reader's discretion. I will merely say that no one who is not well acquainted with the rules for the scansion of Chaucer has much chance of success in scanning Gamelyn. The best he can do is to pronounce every final -e as a distinct syllable (unless it is obviously elided or very much in the way), to treat the terminations -ed and -es as forming distinct syllables, to lay a heavy stress on every accented syllable, to pronounce the words very slowly and deliberately, using the old pronunciation as described in my Introduction to Chaucer's Man of Law's Tale, p. x ; and then perhaps he may trust to a well-trained ear. Perhaps the most important of all these hints is that which enjoins slowness and deliberation. If read rapidly after the modern fashion, there may still seem to be a sufficient metre ; but it will have no sort of resemblance to that with which the author was himself familiar.

§ 14. A few remarks upon the rimes may be useful. We find both single rimes, as aright, knight, 1, 2 ; and double rimes, as nam-e, gam-e, 3, 4. The number of double rimes is larger than might be supposed, because many of them are due to the occurrence of final -e, which a modern reader is so apt to neglect ; thus we have again ÿor-e, sor-e, 9, 10, with similar pairs in 15, 16, 19, 20, 23, 24, &c. More obvious double rimes occur in knight-es, to-right-es, 17 ; oth-er, broth-er, 39 ; see also 61, 85, 97, 141, 143, &c. We find two riming with go and so, 45, 431 ; this was doubtless a perfect rime at that date, the vowel being pronounced as oa in oak ; so that two was twoa. We find spencer with an additional accent on the latter syllable, and riming with yeer and dyner, 403, 645. We find the curious spelling hire for here, in order to force a rime with sire, 221 ; this seems to intimate that the word here was, even at this early date, occasionally pronounced as it is at the present day<sup>2</sup>. We find noon riming with Johan, 365 ; the latter word was pronounced like the modern Joan. I may remark that the rime hye, ye, 333, is a double one; both words are dissyllabic, hy-ë, y-ë, the y being pronounced as i in antique. Some of the rimes are imperfect; thus wyt, bet, 111, is incorrect. Now, now, 93, is a mere repetition, and not a true rime at all. Gat-e, skap-e, 575, form a mere assonance; i. e. they are mere vowel-rimes, the identity of consonants being neglected. We find just the very same assonance in the Romaunt of the Rose, where shape rimes with make, 2260; escape with make, 2753; and take with scape, 3165. It will be observed that the voiceless stopped consonants t, p, and k were considered as approaching to identity. The only thoroughly bad rime is that of chanoun with nom, 781, which is made still worse by its false grammar. Nom is not the true form of the infinitive, but should have been nim; the author actually employs the true past tense singular nam, 733, and the true past participle nom-e, 584, 683, 796; but again errs in employing nam (instead of namen, name, nomen, or nome) in l. 216; where the plural form is wanted. These false rimes are quite enough to shew that Chaucer was not the author.

§ 15. As to the grammatical forms, a few words may suffice; for I have already said that they are much the same as in Chaucer, but a little less particular; the greater strictness which should consist with an earlier date being more than counterbalanced by the tendency to simplicity of a slightly more Northern dialect. The chief suffixes are the following.

The suffix -es is common in the plural of substantives, as knight-es, 17, lond-es, 18, &c.; in the genitive case singular, as godd-es, 24; fadr-es, 58; Gamelyn-es, 64; and in adverbs, as on-es, 234.

The suffix -ed occurs in past participles, as dress-ed, 15. But it is also common as a shortened form of -ed-e, the true ending of the past tense of many weak verbs; as lou-ed (for lou-ed-e or lou-ed-en, plural), 7; deseru-ed (for deseru-ed-e), 8. The full form, as lyu-ed-e, 9, is less common than in Chaucer.

The suffix -en is not very common, except as the sign of the infinitive, as in lyu-en, 27; or as the sign of the past tense plural, as went-en, 42; dalt-en, 45; let-en, 46. It is also a sign of the past participle of strong verbs, as i-broken, 85; get-en, 108; bet-en, 115; it is shortened to n in bor-n (for bor-en, 108);

y-doo-n, 54. In all three cases the final -en is frequently reduced to final -e<sup>1</sup>.

The suffix -eth occurs in the third person singular of the indicative mood, as draw-eth, 28; but it also denotes the imperative plural, as dress-eth, 36; forget-ith = forget-eth, 38; tak-eth, 39; and is shortened to -th in go-th, 36.

I shall conclude these remarks upon the grammar by specifying some of the principal uses of the final -e, numbering them in the same way as in my remarks upon the Metre of the Squire's Tale (see Introd. to The Prioresses Tale, &c., p. lxx).

1. Nouns of A.S. origin and of dissyllabic form. Wille, 28, A.S. willa; mete, 90, A.S. mete; schame, 99, A.S. sceamu; name, 100, A.S. nama; dore, 127, A.S. duru; steede, 187, A.S. stéda; fare, 199, A.S. faru; moone, 235, A.S. móna; eye, 253, A.S. ege, i. e. terror; pleye, 254, A.S. plega; erthe, 300, A.S. eorþe; teene, 303, A.S. téona; y-ë, 334, A.S. éage; herte, 335, A.S. heorte; &c. There are many more, the discovery of which will afford good exercise in etymology<sup>2</sup>.

2. Nouns of French origin. These are not numerous, owing to the small percentage of words of French origin, very different from that which we find in Chaucer. Thus in ll. 43-52, we have ten consecutive lines without a word of French. Examples are: heritage, 58, O.F. heritagë; queste, 64, O.F. questë; paire, 188, O.F. peirë, pairë; place, 210, 213, O.F. placë; feste, 327, O.F. festë; gyle, 369, O.F. guilë; &c.

3. Dative Cases. These occur chiefly after the prepositions at, by, for, in, of, on, to, vp-on, vn-to. Examples: bedde, 24, A.S. bedde, dat. of bed; halle, 77, A.S. healle, dat. of heal; ærde, 81, A.S. gearde, dat. of geard; foote, 109, A.S. fôte (as well as fét), dat. of fót; hepe, 124, A.S. héape, dat. of héap; lyue, 157, A.S. lîfe, dat. of lîf; ore, 159, A.S. áre, dat. of ár, i. e. grace, favour; &c.

<sup>1</sup> As a sign of a plural substantive we have only the examples brether-en, 48; hos-en, 269. Compare both-en, 625; schoo-n, 269. Examples of adverbs are sith-en, 900; bysid-en, 171. A preposition is without-en, 313. The -ën in gam-en, 290, is an essential part of the word.

<sup>2</sup> Owing to the confusion of suffixes in the Middle-English period, we find words with final -e that are hardly entitled to them. Hence berde for berd, 82; &c.

4. Genitive Cases. These are rare; but we find halle, 461, 496, A.S. healle, gen. of heal. So also Soneday, 434, A.S. sunnan dæg, day of the sun, is an older form than Sunday, 459; the form here varies with the metre.

5. Adjectives: Definite form. The definite form is used when the adjective is preceded by the, this, that, or a possessive pronoun. Examples: his righte, 3; The goode, 9; that ilke, 30; my 3onge, 38; that grete, 117; the 3onge, 190; The false, 192; the grete, 285; the faire, 310; &c.

6. Adjectives: Plural forms. Ex.: alle stille, 54; bothe, 74; goode, 496, 592. So also the numerals fyue, 57, 59; fiftene, sixtene, 358; twelue, 652.

7. Adjectives: Vocative Case. Ex.: Goode, 199, 207. Examples are rare.

8. Adjectives: other inflexions. Some adjectives, by confusion with the definite form, take a final -e. Hence: a false, 168. In most cases, however, the final -e can be accounted for etymologically. Thus moche, 6, 275, is short for mochel or muchel, A.S. mycel; 3are, 90, is A.S. gearu; worse, 107, is A.S. wyrsa.

9. Verbs: Infinitive Mood. The final -e is short for -en, A.S. -an. Ex.: speke, 20; sende, 34; haue, 44; wraththe, 80; come, 120; lepe, 123; bygynne, 132; ryde, 312.

10. Verbs: Gerundial Infinitive. Known by the use of to preceding it; A.S. -anne. Ex.: To helpe, 18; t'abyde, 24; to bete, 118; for to ryde, 177.

11. Strong Verbs: Past Participles. The right suffix is -en, as to-broken, 97; but the final -n is often dropped, the -e being preserved. Ex.: i-nome, 119; flowe, 133; holde, 248; i-steke, 329; y-bounde, 397.

12. Weak Verbs: Past tense in -de or -te. Ex.: (a) cowde, 4; lyuede (with full suffix -ed-e), 9; scholde, 12; hadde, 13, 307; deyde, 68; dede, 75; wolde, 80; sayde, 297. Some common words can drop the final -e at times, especially before a vowel; hence: loked (for lokede), 125. Ex.: (b) dalte, 65; aboughte, 76; wente, 88; wiste, 167, 369; kiste, 168; caste, 237<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> These verbs, with the past tenses in -de or -te, all invariably lose the final -e in the past participle, which in A.S. ends in -od or -ed. Just so, in German, if the past tense is brachte, with final -e, the pp. is gebracht, without it. Hence the pp. i-had, 357; wist, 393. It seems a 13. Verbs: Subjunctive Mood. Ex.: stonde, i. e. may stand, 64; graunte, i. e. may grant, 154. Not common.

14. Verbs: various other inflexions. Ex.: (a) 1 p. pr. indicative; warne, 26; beseke (probably pronounced bysek', for euphony), 35; byquethe, 62; telle, 371; byseche, 399. (b) 2 p. imper. sing. of weak verbs; aske, 153, A.S. ásca, imper. s. of áscian or ácsian; loke, 154, A.S. lóca, imper. s. of lócian; so also the French verb graunte, 149, by analogy.

Besides these examples, we find (c) the remarkable use of -e in the 2nd pers. sing. of the pt. t. of strong verbs, as in Anglo-Saxon; where modern English has substituted -est. Ex.: spake, 94; come, i. e. camest, 222; knewe, 224; threwe, 372. Moreover, the strong verbs, which never (except in the second person) take a final -e in the past tense singular, do so in the plural; hence: they drowe, 130, pl. of drow; gonne, 236, pl. of gan, 130.

15. Adverbs. Ex.: sone, 6, 132; Selde, 40; stille, 50, 102; wrothe, 73; algate, 115; swithe sore, 152; byside, 178, 183; wyde, 311; stronge, 397; longe, 398; &c. By analogy we even find there (riming with were), 251; here, 282; though the A.S. forms are Ʒær, hér. These are not solitary examples; Chaucer likewise has there riming with were, in the Pardoner's Tale, Group C, l. 689; whilst here is distinctly dissyllabic in the Ormulum, l. 3264.

To the above examples of adverbs we may add the preposition withoute, 26, 259, short for withouten.

We must also be careful to observe that -e sometimes forms a distinct syllable in the middle of a word. Ex.: wyd-e-pher, 13; smert-e-ly, 187, 243, 247; auaunc-e-ment, 418; lugg-e-ment, 750; wrast-e-lyng, 194.

§ 16. The text here printed is based upon the Harleian MS. 7334 in the British Museum, which is much the best and oldest of the MSS. containing the Tale. By careful collation with other MSS., I have improved the text in several places, but it will be found that the alterations are almost all of a very slight character, and in many cases concern the question of adding a final -e. In no case have I made the slightest deviation from simple matter; yet many students are wholly incapable of parsing wiste and wist, or of making any distinction between them.

the above MS. without noting the fact in the footnotes, and giving the names of the MSS. which support the alteration, or at any rate saying what reading I propose. Thus in l. 3, the word right ought grammatically to be righte, but I cannot in this instance give my authority, because all the MSS. (except the best) unluckily and wrongly omit the word altogether. The student who desires further information may consult the Six-text edition of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, printed for the Chaucer Society by Mr. Furnivall. There the following MSS. are printed in extenso, viz. the Royal MS. 18 C. ii (which I denote by Rl.), also in the British Museum; the Harleian MS. no. 1758, in the same library<sup>1</sup>; the Sloane MS. no. 1685, in the same library (denoted by Sl.)<sup>2</sup>; the MS. in Corpus Christi College, Oxford (denoted by Cp.); the Petworth MS. (Pt.), belonging to Lord Leconfield; and the Lansdowne MS. no. 851, in the British Museum (Ln.). I have also consulted, occasionally, two MSS. in the Cambridge University Library, marked respectively Ii. 3. 26 and Mm. 2. 5. It may be noted that many of the MSS. have lost various lines, owing to the carelessness of the scribes. Thus Rl. omits ll. 281, 282, 283, 375, 376, 377, 731, 813, 814. Harl. 1758 omits 281, 282, 375, 376, 813, 814. Sl. omits 281, 282, 375, 376, 377, 441, 442, 496, 813, 814; and MS. Royal 17 D. xv. omits 856, 857. Cp., which is the second best copy, omits l. 264. Pt. omits 281, 282, 375, 376, 813, 814. Ln. omits 263, 264, 265, 341, 342, 343, 344, 731, 733, 769, 770. The agreement between the MSS. is remarkably close, and the chief differences are in the spelling. The word com, supplied in l. 550 from the two Cambridge MSS., should perhaps be wente; the omission of the verb in the other copies is curious, as it leaves both sense and scansion imperfect. In l. 629, Mr. Wright supplied the word in before compas, but without any better authority (as far as I can see) than Urry's edition. So also in l. 444, he inserted thing after another, on the same authority. The true reading of almost every line can be sufficiently ascertained.

§ 17. The previous editions of the Tale may be briefly described. I have already said that it was first printed by Urry in 1721, in his edition of Chaucer. His spellings of the words are so fantastical, and the whole of his work so worthless and absurd, that it is hardly even possible to say what MS. he used. This miserable version was reprinted in Chalmers' English Poets, i. 607, in 1810. Tyrwhitt omitted it in his edition of the Canterbury Tales, quite rightly, on the ground that Chaucer had no hand in it. Mr. Wright first printed it from the best MS., viz. Harl. 7334, in his undated cheap edition of the Canterbury Tales, distinguishing it from the genuine Tales by the use of smaller type. He followed the MS. very closely, but somewhat carelessly omitted three lines, viz. ll. 563, 601, 602; which throws out the correct numbering of the lines. Wright's text was reprinted in Bell's edition of Chaucer, but without comparison with the MS.; consequently, the same three lines are omitted there also. Finally, Dr. Morris again reprinted Wright's text in his edition of Chaucer, but with more care, discovering and supplying the three missing lines, and making a few corrections; whilst Mr. Furnivall, in his Six-text edition, printed six other MSS. (as said above), purposely omitting MS. Harl. 7334, owing to its having already thrice appeared in print. It will hence be understood that the texts as given by Wright, Bell, and Morris are all much the same, and represent the same MS.; Dr. Morris's text being the most correct of the three. In some places Dr. Morris has purposely made slight alterations; it will suffice to add that in lines 166, 212, 405, 426, 528, 773, 785, 857, 877, he has followed Mr. Wright's text rather than the MS., but there is no difference sufficiently important to need further comment.

§ 18. A carefully written critical examination of The Tale of Gamelyn, by F. Lindner, appeared in the Englische Studien, ed. E. Kölbing, vol. ii. pp. 94, 321 (1878). He seems, however, to have committed the singular error of confusing MS. Harl. 1758 with MS. Harl. 7334, not being aware of the existence of two copies of our poem in the Harleian collection. This is very unfortunate, because he has consequently omitted to consult the readings of MS. Harl. 7334, which is much the best copy, and would have solved many of his difficulties. Hence he speaks of the text in Bell's Chaucer as being printed from 'the Harleian MS.,' and notices that it varies considerably from it<sup>1</sup>; meaning, as I suppose, that it varies considerably from MS. Harl. 1758. No doubt it does; for Bell's text is a mere copy of Wright's text, and the latter represents (very faithfully upon the whole, though with the unlucky omission of three lines) the other Harl. MS., No. 7334. Elsewhere he draws the conclusion that the best copy is to be found in the Corpus MS., because it omits only one line; the fact being that MS. Harl. 7334 is perfect, and omits no line at all. Yet most of his conclusions are quite correct, and his criticisms just. It is interesting to find that, even without the assistance of the best MS., he was able to see that all the copies really go back to one original; that the Corpus MS. is 'the best,' i. e. the next best to Harl. 7334; that the Lansdowne MS. most closely agrees with the Corpus MS.; and that the other MSS. give inferior readings, the Sloane MS. being the worst. I can only indicate very briefly some of Lindner's results, and must refer the reader to the original article for further information.

He remarks that Gamelyn was first composed for recitation; observe the frequent repetition of litheth, i. e. listen ye, at the beginning of each section of the lay; see ll. 1, 169, 289, 341, 551, 769; cf. l. 615. For a comparison of Gamelyn with Lodge's novel, he refers us to Delius' edition of Shakespeare, ii. 347 (1872). At p. 101 he gives us a complete Rime-index to the whole poem, and at p. 107 notices the false rimes on which I have already commented; also the repetitions of now, 93; other, 445; the, 363, 399. The rimes are mostly of the most ordinary character, and the poem is very inartificial; see, e. g., ll. 135-138, 261-270, 315-318, 529-534, 649-652, 729-732, 811-814; &c. The author constantly repeats himself; note the repetition of sore in ll. 10, 11; for to dele, 42, 43; also ll. 72, 73; 85, 86, compared with 97, 98; al that my fader me byquath, 99, 157, 160, 360; 120, 121; 149, 150, compared with 151-154; 190, 191, &c. Short expressions or 'tags' occur over and over again; as, ther he lay, 11, 21, 25, 33, 50, 52, 66; Cristes curs mot he haue, 106, 114, 116, 818; by Cristes ore, 139, 159, 231, 323; he bigan to goon, 126, 220, 236, 498; euel mot ze thee, 131, 363, 448, 720; cf. 379, 413, 577; whil he was on lyue, 20, 58, 157, 225, 228. There are frequent examples of alliteration, as litheth and lesteneth, 1, 169, &c.; bote of bale, 32, 34, 631; stondeth alle stille, 55; stoon-stille, 67, &c.; which the reader may easily find. We also find repetitions of ideas, the latter part of the verse merely reproducing the former; as in 107, 174, 217, 221, 381, 699, 732. The proportion of French words in 'Gamelyn' is much less than in Chaucer. A description of the MSS. is given at p. 321 (where MS. Harl. 7334 is not mentioned). At p. 324 is an analysis of some of the looser rimes, according to the various spellings of the MSS. The rime thare, zare, 89, 793, is certainly Northern. Observe zing, kyng, 887<sup>1</sup>. At p. 328 is a full analysis of the grammatical forms and of varieties of spelling. At p. 113, Lindner is inclined to connect the story of Gamelyn with the time of Fulke Fitz Warin, i. e. with the time of King John; see Ten Brink, Early English Literature, Eng. version, p. 149. At p. 321, he says that the description of Gamelyn's brother's house, with its hall-door (461), outer gate (286), postern-gate (589), bower (405), &c. suits the description of an Anglo-Norman manor-house of the thirteenth century; see Wright, A History of English Culture, London, 1874. The father of the hero was evidently a Norman knight; cf. l. 108. See also the note (by Jephson) in Bell's edition, to l. 892; 'This is the usual dénouement of all the tales of this class, and it may possibly be founded upon fact. For it might be sound policy on the king's part to enlist the services of a bold and popular outlaw, like Gamelyn, in the cause of order, at a time when personal valour and daring were often able to set the law at defiance. An honest but inexperienced and unwarlike magistrate would have been of very little use in a forest in Nottinghamshire<sup>2</sup> in the thirteenth century.' Lindner emphasises the word thirteenth (which may easily have been a mistake for fourteenth,

<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, we have tonge, yonge, 169. I suspect that dialectal variations enabled some of our poets, especially those who only composed for recitation, to be not very particular.

<sup>2</sup> Here the locality of the poem is assumed without proof; however, the statement would apply to other counties.

such mistakes being extremely common), and unhesitatingly attributes our poem to the thirteenth century. Here I do not hesitate to say, that it is certainly not earlier than 1320 (see p. xiii. above, l. 26), as the language plainly shews. That it may refer to the thirteenth century is another matter ; but, even so, there is no need to suppose it to refer to a time much earlier than A.D. 1300. The 'Outlaw's Song of Trailbaston,' printed in Wright's Political Songs, p. 231, is worth consulting as shewing the spirit of those times, and we know that this song cannot have been composed before April 6, 1305. If we assign the composition of Gamelyn to about 1340, I do not think we shall be far wrong.

§ 19. INDEX OF FRENCH WORDS IN THE TALE OF GAMELYN.

The following is a list of such French words as I have observed in the Tale ; I hope I have included all of them.

- Allowe, 578 ; armure, 98 ; aspied, 392, 490 ; assise, 870, 889 ; assoile, 449 (assoiled, 516) ; auauncement, 418 ; auentures, 777 ; auntre, 217, 666 ; auow, 378.
- Baillye, 709 ; barre, 852, 860, 867 ; beestes, 359 ; (bi)gyled, 369 ; bokeler, 136 ; bourde, 858.
- Cark, 760 ; catour, 321 ; champioun, 203, 218, 219, 223, 227, 233, 236, 237, 239, 243, 249, 253, 255, 261, 266, 273 ; chanoun, 509, 781 ; charite, 451, 513 ; chaunce, 746 ; chef, 891 ; chere, 319, 534 ; company, 310, 317, 565, 854 ; compas, 629 ; contek, 132 ; continaunce, 262 ; couenant, 414 ; conseil, 42, 456, 683 ; courser, 176 (coursers, 181, 611) ; croune, 523, 671 ; crouned, 660, 694, 695 ; crie, 710, 722, 874 (cryed, 171, 183, 700) ; cuntre, 17.
- Delay, 791 ; delyuer, 751 (delyuered, 753) ; delyueraunce, 745 ; deserued, 8 ; dette, 512 ; dismay, 31, 623, 763 ; dol(fully), 475 ; dout, v. 517 (doutiden, 78) ; doute, s. 630 ; dressen, 18, 848 (dressed, 15 ; dresseth, 36) ; dure, 831 ; dyner, 645.
- Endite, 698, 722 (endited, 710) ; enemys, 896 ; enquered, 862.
- Faile, 448, 586 (faileth, 446) ; false, 168, 192, 351, 363, 383, 463, 471, 615, 697, 723, 739, 784, 800, 859, 883 (fals, 392 ; falsnes, 164, 884) ; faith, 868 ; fay, 555 ; feire, 270 ; feste, 327, 339, 459 ; folye, 884 ; fool, 222, 274 ; forest, 891 ; frankeleyn, 197, 201, 211, 251, 253, 275 ; frere, 529, 533 ; fyn, adj. 681 ; fyn, s. 551.

- Galys, 277, 764 ; gentil, 663 (gentil-men, 267) ; grace, 630, 725, 815 ; graunte, 149, 154, 156, 744, 751 ; greeue, 313 ; grucche, 319 (grucching, 322, 325) ; gyle, s. 369, 562, 580 ; gyled, 70.
- Heir, 365, 366, 897 (eyr, 40) ; heritage, 58. Ire, 698.
- Iames, 277 (Iame, 665, 764, 797) ; Iohan, 3, 57, 226, 366 ; ioye, 284, 758, 902 ; ioli(ly), 527 ; Iugge(man), 843 ; Iuggement, 750 ; Iustice, 742, 749, 761, 766, 790, 792, 794, 799, 805, 823, 826, 835, 843, 845, 849, 859, 868, 869, 879, 890, 891 (Iustices, 855, 857).
- Large, 514 (largely, 324, 520) ; lettres, 19 ; lewte, 657 ; lyoun, 125 ; lyuerey, 514.
- Maister (mayster), 256, 637, 639, 656, 658, 660, 668, 669, 677, 683, 686, 688, 694, 776, 834, 876 (maistres, 314) ; mangerye, 345, 434, 464 ; Martyn, 53, 225 ; Maryes, 322, 480 ; messenger, 729 ; maynpris, 744 ; mercy, 874 ; messes, 467 ; meyne, 575.
- Norture, 4.
- Office, 894 ; ordeyne, 798 (ordeyned, 878) ; ordres, 533 ; Ote, 727 (and 18 times more).
- Paire, 188 ; pantrye, 495 ; par ma foy, 367 ; paraenture, 642 ; parde, 743 ; part, s. 16 ; parten, 317, 410 ; party, 392 ; passe, 516, 596 ; passioun, 477 ; pay, 514 ; pees, 102, 139, 548, 689, 889 ; pestel, 122, 128, 138, 140, 152 ; peyned, 261 ; place, 195, 203, 210, 213, 216, 263, 267 ; porter, 287, 295, 303, 326, 559, 561, 566, 567, 571, 573, 577, 580 ; post, 387, 437 ; posterne, 589 ; power, 846 ; preuen, 174 (prouen, 242 ; i-proued, 241) ; prest, 237, 830 ; priour, 487, 492, 509 (priours, 435, 781) ; prisoun, 442, 478, 481, 726, 741, 796 ; y-prisoned, 737 ; priue, 425 ; prow, 361 ; prys, 772 ; purchas, 14, 61 ; purs, 321, 885.
- Quest, 786, 801, 840, 842, 862, 871, 878 ; queste, 64 ; quitte, 512, 896.
- Route, 600 (rowte, 285) ; Rycher, 137, 175, 357, 619.
- Seller, 316 (selleer, 351) ; seruantz, 544 ; serue, 468 (serued, 404, 467, 469, 544) ; seynt, 53, 137, 174, 225, 277, 322, 357, 451, 480, 513, 619, 665, 765, 797 ; sire (sir), 3, 221, 696 (and 18 times more) ; sisours, 871, 881 ; skape, 576, 825 ; solas, 328 ; soper, 425 ; spenden, 320 (spende, 324 ; spended, 362) ; spence, 424 ; spense, 320 ; spenser, 398, 399, 493, 501, 618, 620, 646 ; stoor, 354 ; strif, 549, 758 ; stroye, 354 ; stryue, 158.

Toret, 329 ; tornes, 237, 241, 244 ; trauail, 301 ; traytour, 406 ; trecherie, 346, 463, 883 ; tresoun, 165, 168, 393.

Verrey, 14 ; vilonye, 721.

Wardeynes, 279 ; wasten, 330 ; wicket, 563 (wyket, 298).

§ 20. I have already spoken of the literary interest of the Tale of Gamelyn, especially in connection with the Robin Hood ballads and As You Like It. It is remarkable as being a story without a heroine ; no female name is even mentioned in it, and it is only in the fifth line from the end that we are told that the hero 'wedded a wife both good and fair.' Hence it is not surprising that Lodge thought it necessary to expand the story, and to provide a Rosalind for his Rosader, to the great gain of our literature. From a purely linguistic point of view, I believe that the Tale is of considerable value, as affording a fair specimen of the East-Midland dialect as spoken more than five hundred years ago. The spelling of every word in the poem deserves careful attention, as possessing a phonetic value far exceeding the conventional system now in use. The Notes explain the more difficult phrases and allusions, and the Glossarial Index includes all the words which can cause any difficulty. For the etymology of such words as are still in use, I beg leave to refer the reader to my Etymological Dictionary of the English Language, either in the larger or in the 'Concise' form. In writing the Notes, I have gladly availed myself of such brief notes as are given by Mr. Wright and by Mr. Jephson (who annotated Bell's Chaucer) ; to which I have added many from other sources.

In conclusion, I have to express my sense of the great help afforded me by Mr. Furnivall's Six-text edition of Chaucer, the readings of which I have implicitly followed. I am also much obliged to Professor Hales and Mr. Oliphant for some hints which have proved helpful in writing this Introduction ; and I must refer all who desire further information about Robin Hood to the remarks by Professor Hales upon the Percy Folio MS., as edited by Mr. Furnivall and himself. The reader may also consult Wright's Essays on the Literature of England in the Middle Ages, and the remarks in vol. v of Professor Child's English and Scotch Ballads, where it is ingeniously suggested that the name Hood may be a corruption of 'ood, well-known as a common provincial corruption of the word wood; so that Robin Hood may have meant, at first, no more than Robin of the Wood. In fact, the following remarkable stanza, which seems to point clearly in the same direction, occurs in the ballad of the 'Birth of Robin Hood' in Mr. Allingham's Ballad-book, where it is said to have been 'taken down from recitation without the alteration of a single word.' Earl Richard discovers that his daughter has given birth to a son in the greenwood, whereupon

He kist him o'er and o'er again,
 'My grandson I thee claim;
 And Robin Hood in gude greenwood,
 'Tis that shall be your name.'

Peele, the dramatist, in his play of Edward I., speaks expressly of 'Robin of the Wood, alias Robin Hood'; see Greene and Peele's Works, ed. Dyce, p. 403, col. 1. 'It is curious,' says Professor Child at p. xxv of his Introduction, 'that Orlando in As You Like It (who represents the outlaw Gamelyn in the Tale of Gamelyn, a tale which clearly belongs to the cycle of Robin Hood) should be the son of Sir Roland de Bois. Robin de Bois, says a writer in Notes and Queries, vi. 597, occurs in one of Sue's novels as a well-known mythical character, whose name is employed by French mothers to frighten their children.' I may add that Leigh Hunt, in his Songs of Robin Hood, makes Gamelyn de Vere Robin's uncle, talks of Gamelyn Hall and Gamelyn wood, and introduces Will Scarlet as one of Gamelyn de Vere's serving-men; all of which seems to be rather a strange jumble. I have more sympathy with the pleasing lines by Keats:—

'Gone, the merry morris din,
 Gone, the song of Gamelyn;
 Gone, the tough-belted outlaw
 Idling in the "grenè shawe" . . .
 So it is; yet let us sing
 Honour to the old bow-string!
 Honour to the bugle-horn!
 Honour to the woods unshorn!
 Honour to the Lincoln green!
 Honour to the archer keen!'

The 'song of Gamelyn' is not yet quite 'gone'; and I shall be glad if this edition helps to revive it.

ADDITIONAL NOTES.

172. So also in Robert of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, ll. 990-992 :—

ȝyf þou euer settyst swerde eyþer ryng
 For to gadyr a wrastlyng, þe halyday þou holdest noghte.

780. The word ferde (see Glossary) is not the pt. t. of faren, but of M. E. feren, a derivative of faren. M. E. feren = A. S. féran, derived from fór, pt. t. of faran.

786. Though quest here means the jury, the word originally referred to the process of enquiry or trial, and is short for inquest, more correctly enquest, from the O. F. enqueste, enquiry, examination. In Robert of Brunne's Handlyng Synne, l. 5508, quest is used to translate the O. F. enqueste, with the sense of enquiry. 'The Frankish capitularies had a process called inquisitio, which was adopted into Norman law, and was there called enquête [in true old spelling enqueste]: this, having passed with the Normans into England, was finally shaped and embodied in the common law among the legal reforms of Henry II ;' Earle, Anglo-Saxon Literature, p. 165.

871. Wyclif complains that 'iurrouris in questis wolen forsweren hem [forswear themselves] wittingly for here dyner and a noble ;' Works, ed. Matthew, p. 183.

NOTES.

1. Litheth, hearken ye; cf. l. 169. This is the imperative plural; so also lesteneth, herkeneth. See remarks on the dialect in the Preface. For the explanation of the harder words, see the Glossary. Compare: 'Now list and lithe, you gentlemen'; Percy Folio MS., ii. 218; 'Now lithe and listen, gentlemen,' id. iii. 77.

3. Iohan of Boundys. It is not clear what is meant by Boundys, which is repeated in l. 226; nor is there any clear indication of the supposed locality of the story. Lodge, in his novel (see the Preface), ingeniously substitutes Bourdeaux, and calls the knight 'Sir John of Bourdeaux.'<sup>1</sup> In Shakespeare, he becomes Sir Roland de Bois.

The reading righte (for right) is demanded by grammar, the article being in the definite form; and the same reading is equally demanded by the metre. Where the final e is thus necessary to the grammar and metre alike, there is little difficulty in restoring the correct reading. Compare the good-e knight in ll. 11, 25, 33.

4. 'He was sufficiently instructed in right bringing up, and knew much about sport.' Nurture is the old phrase for 'a genteel education.' Thus we find 'The boke of Nurture, or Schoole of good maners: for men, seruants, and children,' written by Hugh Rhodes, and printed in 1577; and John Russell's 'Boke of Nurture,' in MS. Harl. 4011. See the Babees Book, ed. F. J. Furnivall, 1868; where much information as to the behaviour of our forefathers is given. By game is meant what is now called sport; 'The Master of the Game' is the name of an old treatise on hunting; see Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 149.

5. Thre sones, three sons. They are here named Johan, Ote, and Gamelyn; Lodge calls them Saladyne, Fernandine, and Rosader; in Shakespeare, they are Oliver, Jaques, and Orlando. The characters of the three are much the same in all three versions of the story.

6. Sone he began, he soon began, viz. to evince his disposition.

12. His day, his term of life; his lifetime. So in Hamlet, v. i. 315. the 'dog will have his day.' Hence after his day is, practically, after his death.

14. 'This appears to mean, that the knight had himself acquired his land, and held it in fee simple (verrey purchas), not entailed nor settled; and that, consequently, he had a right to divide it among his children as he pleased. The housbond in this case means a man who was kept at home looking after his domestic business and his estates, and who could not be wyde-wher,' i.e. often far from home; note by Mr. Jephson. See ll. 58-61 below, which prove that the knight had partly inherited his land, and partly won it by military service. Cf. Chaucer, Prol. 256 (or 258), 319 (or 321). In the Freres Tale (C. T. 7031) we find:—

'And here I ride about my purchasing,
To wote wher men wol giue me any-thing;
My purchas is theeffect of all my rente.'

I cannot think that Dr. Morris is right in explaining purchasyng by 'prosecution'; see Purchas in the Glossary.

16. Hadde, might have; the subjunctive mood.

20. On lyue, in life; now written a-live or alive. Lyue is the dat. case, governed by on, which constantly has the sense of 'in' in A.S. and M.E.

23. Ther, where. The reader should note this common idiom, or he will miss the structure of the sentence. Cf. ll. 33, 52, 66, etc.

31. Ne dismay you nought, do not dismay yourself; i.e. be not dismayed or dispirited.

32. 'God can bring good out of the evil that is now wrought.' Boot, advantage, remedy, or profit, is continually contrasted with bale or evil; the alliteration of the words rendered them suitable for proverbial phrases. One of the commonest is 'When bale is hext, then boot is next,' i.e. when evil is highest (at its height), then the remedy is highest. This is one of the Proverbs of Hendyng; see Specimens of English, ed. Morris and Skeat, part ii. p. 40. So, in l. 34, Boote of bale means 'remedy of evil,' good out of evil. See note to l. 631.

34. It is no nay, there is no denying it, it cannot be denied. So in Chaucer, C. T. 8692, 9015.

39. That on, that other, the one, the other. Sometimes corruptly written the ton, the tother; and hence the vulgar English the tother.

48. Whan he good cowde, when he knew what was good, i.e. when he was old enough to know right from wrong; or, as we now say, when he came to years of discretion. Observe that the division of land here proposed was not final; for the good knight, being still alive, altered it; see l. 54.

53. 'Saint Martin was a Hungarian by birth, and served in the army under Constantius and Julian. He is represented in pictures as a Roman knight on horseback, with his sword dividing his cloak into two pieces, one of which he gives to a beggar. He was a strenuous opponent of the Arians, and died at Tours, where his relics were preserved and honoured.—Jephson. St. Martin's day, commonly called Martinmas, is Nov. 11. The knight swears by St. Martin in his character of soldier. Cf. l. 225.

57. Plowes, ploughlands; see the Glossary.

62. The knight's intention was, evidently, that Gamelyn's share should be the best. In Lodge's novel, Sir John gives to the eldest 'fourteen ploughlands, with all my manor-houses and my richest plate'; to the second, 'twelve ploughlands'; but to the youngest, says he, 'I give my horse, my armour, and my lance, with sixteene ploughlands; for, if the inward thoughts be discovered by outward shadows, Rosader wil exceed you all in bountie and honour.'

64. 'That my bequest may stand,' i.e. remain good.

67. Stoon-stille, as still as a stone. So Chaucer has 'as stille as stoon'; Clerkes Tale, l. 121. See ll. 263, 423.

76. 'And afterwards he paid for it in his fair skin.' We should now say, his recompense fell upon his own head.

78. Of good wil, readily, of their own accord. 'They of their own accord feared him as being the strongest.' So also 'of thine own good will,' Shak. Rich. II. iv. 1. 177; 'by her good will,' Venus and Adonis, 479. But the nearest parallel passage is in Octouian Imperator, l. 561, pr. in Weber's Metrical Romances, iii. 180. It is there said of some sailors who were chased by a lioness, that they ran away very hastily 'with good wylle.' Cf. in wille, i.e. anxious, in l. 173.

82. To handle his beard, i.e. to feel, by his beard, that he was of full age. Lodge has a parallel passage. 'With that, casting up his hand, he felt haire on his face, and perceiving his beard to bud, for choler he began to blush, and swore to himselfe he would be no more subject to such slaverie.' Cf. As You Like It, iii. 2. 218, 396.

90. 'Is our meat prepared,' i.e. is our dinner ready? Our perhaps means my, being used in a lordly style. See the next note.

92. Observe the use of the familiar thou, in place of the usual respectful ye. This accounts for the elder brother's astonishment, as expressed in the next line.

100. 'Brother by name, and brother in that only.'

101. That rape was of rees, who was hasty in his fit of passion. Mr. Jephson's explanation 'deprived of reason for anger' is incorrect. Rape is hasty; see the Glossary. Rees is the modern E. race, A. S. ræs, applied to any sudden course, whether bodily or mental; cf. l. 547. So in Gower, ed. Pauli, i. 335, we find:—

'Do thou no-thinge in suche a rees,'

i. e. do nothing in such a sudden fit; referring to Pyramus, who rashly slew himself upon the hasty false assumption that Thisbe was dead.

102. Gadeling, fellow; a term of reproach. But observe that the sarcasm lies in the similarity of the sound of the word to Gamelyn. Hence Gamelyn's indignant reply. In P. Plowman, C. xi. 297, gade-lynges are ranked with false folk, deceivers, and liars.

103. 'Thou shalt be glad to get mere food and clothing.'

109. Ner, nigher, the old comparative form; afterwards written near, and wrongly extended to near-er, with a double comparative suffix. Cf. l. 135, 352.

A-foote, on foot; not a foot, the length of a foot, as that would have no final e.

115. Schal algate, must in any case.

116. This is obscure; it may mean 'unless thou art the one (to be also beaten).' That oon, the one, is almost always in connection with that other, the other, which is accordingly here to be understood. We might now say, 'if I am to be beaten, perhaps you will be the one to feel it most.'

121. Ouer-al, all about, all round, everywhere.

122. Stood, i.e. which stood. The omission of the relative is common.

125. Good woon, good store; plentifully.

129. For his ey3e, for awe of him. His is not the possessive pronoun here, but the genitive of the personal pronoun.

130. By halues, lit. by sides; i.e. some to one side, some to the other. Drowe by halves = sidled away.

131. 'May ye prosper ill!' Cf. Chaucer, Pard. Tale (Group C), l. 947.

136. 'I will teach thee some play with the buckler.' An allusion to the 'sword and buckler play,' described in Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, bk. iii. ch. 6. § 22. Not unlike our modern 'single-stick,' but with the addition of a buckler on the left arm. Strutt gives a picture from a Bodleian MS., dated 1344, in which clubs or bludgeons are substituted for swords; and, no doubt, the swords used in sport were commonly of wood. Gamelyn is speaking jocosely; he had no buckler, but he had a wooden 'pestel,' which did very well for a sword.

137. 'By Saint Richard was a favourite oath<sup>1</sup> with the outlaws of Robin Hood's stamp, probably because of his Saxon extraction'; Jephson. Mr. Jephson adds the following quotation from the English Martyrologe, 1608. 'Saint Richard, King and Confessor, was sonne to Lotharius, King of Kent, who, for the love of Christ, taking upon him a long peregrination, went to Rome for devotion to that sea [see], and, on his way homeward, died at Lucca, about the year of Christ 750, where his body is kept until this day, with great veneration, in the oratory and chappell of St. Frigidian, and adorned with an epitaph both in verse and prose.' But this is altogether beside the mark; for Mr. Jephson certainly refers to the wrong saint. There were four St. Richards, commemorated, respectively, on Feb. 7, April 3, June 9, and August 21; see Alban Butler's Lives of the Saints. The day of the Saxon king is Feb. 7; but he could hardly have been so fresh in the memory of Englishmen as the more noted St. Richard, bishop of Chichester, who died in 1253, and was canonised in 1262; his day being April 3. There is a special fitness in the allusion to this latter saint, because he was a pattern of brotherly love, and Johan is here deprecating Gamelyn's anger. Alban Butler says of him: 'The unfortunate situation of his eldest brother's affairs gave him an occasion of exercising his benevolent disposition. Richard condescended to become his brother's servant, undertook the management of his farms, and by his industry and generosity effectually retrieved his brother's before distressed circumstances.' His name still appears in our Prayer-books.

154. 'And mind that thou blame me, unless I soon grant it.'

156. 'If we are to be at one,' i. e. to be reconciled. Cf. l. 166.

158. 'Thou must cause me to possess it, if we are not to quarrel.'

160. We should now say—'All that your father left you, and more too, if you would like to have it.' The offer is meant to be very liberal.

164. 'As he well knew (how to do).'

167. 'In no respect he knew with what sort of a false treason his brother kissed him.' Whiche is cognate with the Latin qualis, and has here the same sense.

171. 'There was a wrestling-match proclaimed there, hard by.'

172. 'And, as prizes for it, there were exhibited a ram and a ring.' In Lodge's novel, 'a day of wrastling and tournament' is appointed by Torimond, king of France. In Chaucer's Prologue, l. 548 (or 550) we find: 'At wrastling he wolde bere away the ram.' On this Tyrwhitt has the following note: 'This was the usual prize at wrestling-matches. See C. T. l. 13671 [Sir Thopas, st. 5], and Gamelyn, ll. 184, 280. Matthew Paris mentions a wrestling match at Westminster, A.D. 1222, at which a ram was the prize.' In Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, bk. ii, ch. 2, § 14, two men are represented as wrestling for a live cock. Strutt also quotes a passage from 'A mery Geste of Robin Hode,' which gives an account of a wrestling, at which the following prizes were 'set up' (the same phrase being used as here), viz. a white bull, a courser with saddle and bridle, a pair of gloves, a red gold ring, and a pipe of wine!

199. 'Why dost thou thus behave?' i. e. make this lamentation. Cf. As You Like It, i. 2. 133-140.

204. 'Unless God be surety for them,' i. e. ensure their recovery,

The story supposes that the two sons are not slain, but greatly disabled; as Shakespeare says, 'there is little hope of life' in them.

206. With the nones, on the occasion that, provided that. For the nones, for the occasion, stands for for then ones, for the once; so here with the nones = with then ones, with the once. Then is the dat. case of the article, being a weakened form of A.S. ðám. Cf. l. 456.

207. Wilt thou wel doon, if thou wishest to do a kind deed.

214. Drede not of, fear not for.

217. 'How he dared adventure himself, to prove his strength upon him that was so doughty a champion?'

224. Whil he couthe go, whilst he was able to go about.

230. A moche schrewe thou were, thou wast a great doer of mischief. Gamelyn retorts that he is now a more, i. e. a still greater doer of mischief. Moche is often used of size. In Havelok, l. 982, more than the meste = bigger than the biggest.

236. Gonne goon, did go. Gonne is a mere auxiliary verb.

237. 'The champion tried various sleights upon Gamelyn, who was prepared for them.'

240. Fast aboute, busily employed, trying your best. Cf. l. 785.

248. Spoken ironically, 'shall it be counted as a throw, or as none?'

249. Whether, &c., whichever it be accounted.

253. Of him, &c., he stood in no awe of him. Instead of our modern expression 'he stood in awe of him,' the M. E. expression is, usually, 'he stood awe of him,' suppressing in. It probably arose out of the very construction here used, viz. 'awe of him stood to him,' i. e. arose in him. However that may be, the idiom is common. Thus, in Barbour's Bruce, iii. 62:—

'Quhen that the lord of Lorne saw
His men stand off him ane sik awe.'

In Havelok, l. 277:—

'Al Engelond of him stod awe,
Al Engelond was of him adrad.'

So also: 'he stode of him non eye'; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 8, l. 24. So also in Wallace, v. 929, vi. 878.

255. 'Who was not at all well pleased.'

256. 'He is master of us all.'

257. 'It is full yore ago'; it is very long ago.

262. Wil nomore, desires no more, has had enough.

270. 'This fair is done.' A proverb, meaning that the things of the fair are all sold, and there is no more business to be done.

271. 'As I hope to do well, I have not yet sold up the half of my ware'; i. e. I have more to offer. The wrestler, in spite of his pain, utters the grim joke that Gamelyn sells his ware too dearly.

272. Haluendel is for A.S. healfne dæl or pone healfan dæl, the accusative case. The word of is to be understood after it. See Zupitza's Notes to Guy of Warwick.

273. See note to l. 334.

276. Lakkest, dispraisest, decriest. In P. Plowman, B. v. 130, we find 'to blame mennes ware'; and, only two lines below, the equivalent phrase 'to lakke his chaffare.'

277. 'By Saint James in Galicia.' In Chaucer's Prologue, the Wife of Bath had been 'in Galice at Seint Jame.' The shrine of St. James, at Compostella in Galicia, was much frequented by pilgrims. See my note to P. Plowman, B. prol. 47. It is remarkable that the whole of this line is quoted from A Poem on the Times of Edw. II., l. 475; see Political Songs, ed. Wright, p. 345. It occurs again below, l. 764.

278. 'Yet it is too cheap, that which thou hast bought.' The franklin tells the defeated wrestler that it is not for him to call Gamelyn's ware dear, for he has, in fact, been let off much too cheaply. Our modern cheap is short for good cheap, i. e. bought in good market. To buy in a good cheap was shortened to to buy good cheap, and finally became to buy cheap.

281. Haue, have, receive, take.

285. Rowte, company. We are to suppose that a crowd of Gamelyn's admirers accompanied him home. In Lodge's novel, the elder brother 'saw wher Rosader returned with the garland on his head, as having won the prize, accompanied with a crue of boon companions; grieved at this, he stepped in and shut the gate.'

297. See note to l. 334.

302. Though thou haddest swore, though thou hadst sworn (the contrary). This curious phrase occurs also in Chaucer, Kn. Tale, l. 231, where 'although we hadde it sworn' is equivalent to 'though we had sworn (the contrary).'

312. 'That desired either to walk or to ride in.' Go, when opposed to ride, means to go on foot, to walk.

318. And ȝe wil doon after me, if ye will act according to my advice; spoken parenthetically.

321. Oure catour, caterer for us. Oure aller purs, the purse of us all. Cf. l. 256.

324. Largely, liberally; the usual old meaning.

328. No cheste, no strife, no quarrelling.

334. So, &c., 'as I hope to enjoy the use of my eye'; lit. 'as I may use my eye.' This phrase occurs also in Havelok, 2545: 'So mote ich brouke mi rith eie,' as I hope to have the use of my right eye. And again in the same, l. 1743, with the substitution of 'finger or toe' for 'right eye'; and in l. 311, with the substitution of 'mi blake swire,' i. e.

my black neck ; cf. ll. 273, 297 above. See also ll. 407, 489, 567. Even Chaucer has : 'So mot I brouke wel myn eyen twaye,' as I hope to make good use of my two eyes ; Nonne Prestes Tale, 479.

338. Bitaughte is used in two senses ; they commended Gamelyn to God's protection, and bade him good day.

345. Mangerye, feast, lit. an eating. It occurs in P. Plowman, C. xiii. 46 ; Wyclif, Works, ed. Arnold, i. 4. In Sir Amadace, st. 55, a wedding-feast is called a maungery, and lasted 40 days ; Early Eng. Metrical Romances, ed. Robson, p. 49. Cf. ll. 434, 464.

352. Ful neer, much nearer. See note to l. 109.

366. Johan was pronounced like mod. E. Joan, and rimes with noon, pronounced as noan. So also in Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale, l. 1019.

367. 'By my faith' ; cf. l. 555. Chaucer has 'by my fey' ; Kn. Tale, 268.

368. 'If thou thinkest the same as thou sayst, may God requite it thee !'

372. Tho, when. Threwe, didst throw ; observe the absence of -st in the suffix of the second person of the past tense of strong verbs.

373. Moot, meeting, assembly, concourse of people ; in allusion to the crew of companions whom Gamelyn introduced. Moreover, the word moot was especially used of an assembly of men in council, like our modern meeting. Thus Sir Johan expresses that he had made a fixed deliberation, as if the meeting of chance-comers had been really one for the transaction of business. Still, the use of the word is not very happy.

376. It was not uncommon, to prevent a person from being forsworn, that the terms of an oath should be literally fulfilled ; cf. Merch. Ven. iv. 1. 326. In his novel, Lodge avoids all improbability by a much simpler device. He makes the eldest brother surprise the youngest in his sleep. 'On a morning very early he cald up certain of his servants, and went with them to the chamber of Rosader, which being open, he entered with his crue, and surprized his brother when he was asleepe, and bound him with fetters,' &c.

382. Here, as in l. 420, all the MSS. have honde. The final e probably represents the dative or instrumental case, and the correct reading is fote and honde, as in MSS. Pt. and Ln. in both passages.

386. Wood, mad. It was common to bind and starve madmen, and to treat them cruelly. Even Malvolio was to be put 'in a dark room and bound' ; Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 147. Cf. As You Like It, iii. 2. 421.

394. Or, ere, before ; not 'or.' Be, been.

398. 'Spence, or (according to the original French form of the word) despense, was the closet or room in convents and large houses where the victuals, wine, and plate were locked up ; and the person who had the charge of it was called the spencer, or the despencer. Hence originated two common family names.'—Wright. The spence, however, like the spencer, owed its name to the O.F. verb despendre, to spend; as explained in my Etym. Dict., s.v. Spend. See the Glossary. Lodge retains the name of Adam Spencer; whence Adam in Shakespeare.

411. 'Upon such an agreement.'

413. 'All as I may prosper'; as I hope to thrive.

414. 'I will hold covenant with thee, if thou wilt loose me.'

430. Wher I go, whether shall I go. Wher is a contracted form of whether, like or for other. Girde of, strike off.

433. That this, &c., that this is a thing not to be denied, a sure thing.

438. Hem, them, i. e. the fetters (understood); cf. l. 498.

441. Borwe the, be surety for thee, go bail for thee.

444. Do an other, act in another way, try another course. There is no authority for inserting thing after other.

445. Lodge says: 'and at the ende of the hall shall you see stand a couple of good pollaxes, one for you and another for me.'

449. 'If we must in any case absolve them of their sin.' Said jocosely; he was going to absolve them after a good chastisement.

451. For by it would be better to read for; see Charite in the Glossary.

453. Lodge says: 'When I give you a wincke,' &c.

456. For the nones, for the occasion; see note to l. 206.

460. Leste and meste, least and greatest.

461. Halle, of the hall; A. S. healle, gen. case of heal, a hall. In l. 496, we may take halle-dore as a compound word, but halle is still a genitive form.

471. Ther that, where that; as commonly.

481. 'Who begeth for thee (to come) out of prison, or who may be surety for thee; but ever may it be well with them that cause thee much sorrow.'

485. 'All that may be surety for thee, may evil befall them.'

489. So, &c., 'as I hope to make use of my bones,' lit. bone.

503. 'Gamelyn sprinkles holy water with an oaken sprig.' Said jocosely; Gamelyn flourishes his staff like one who sprinkles holy water. A spire is properly a springing shoot, hence a sprig or sapling. See the Glossary.

509. Mr. Jephson here remarks as follows:—'The hatred of churchmen, of holy water, and of everything connected with the church, observable in all the ballads of this class, is probably owing to the fact, that William the Conqueror and his immediate successors systematically removed the Saxon bishops and abbots, and intruded Normans in their stead into all the valuable preferments in England. But there were also other grounds for the odium in which these foreign prelates were held. Sharing in the duties of the common law judges, they participated in the aversion with which the functionaries of the law were naturally regarded by outlaws and robbers,' &c. He also quotes, from the Lytel Geste of Robin Hood, the following :

‘These bysshopes and these archebysshoppes,
Ye shall them beete and bynde ;
The high sheryfe of Notynghame,
Hym holde ye in your mynde.’

It may be added that Lodge entirely omits here all mention of abbot, prior, monk, or canon. Times had changed.

514. ‘Pay a liberal allowance,’ i. e. deal your blows bountifully.

So euer, &c., ‘as sure as ever I hear mass.’ Cf. l. 595.

520. Telle largely, count fully.

523. The crowne, i. e. the crown of each man’s head ; alluding to the tonsure. It means, do not spoil the tonsure on their crowns, but break their legs and arms.

531. Cold reed, cold counsel, unprofitable counsel. So in Chaucer, Nonne Prestes Tale, 435, 436, we find : ‘Wommennes counseils ben ful ofte colde ; Wommannes conseil broughte us first to woo.’ Storm notes the same idiom in Icelandic, köld eru opt kvenna-ráð, women’s counsels are oft-times fatal ; see kaldr in the Icel. Dict. So Shakespeare has ‘colder tidings’ ; Rich. III, iv. 4. 536. Cf. l. 759 below.

532. ‘It had been better for us.’ Cf. l. 621.

533. This is ironical, and refers, as Mr. Jephson rightly says, to the laying on of hands, whereby Gamelyn made his victims deacons and priests after a new fashion of his own.

543. Here loue, love of them ; here awe, awe of them. Here = A.S. hira, gen. pl. of hé, he. Hence here means ‘their,’ as in l. 569.

558. Ther . . inne, wherein (Gamelyn was).

567. ‘As I hope to have the use of my chin.’ See note to l. 334.

578. ‘I will repay thee for thy words, when I see my opportunity.’

583. It ben, they are ; lit. it are. A common idiom in Middle English. See P. Plowman, C. vi. 59, ix. 217, xvi. 309 ; and compare it am I, as in Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale, l. 1109.

588. ‘Make their beds in the fen,’ i. e. lie down in the fen or mud.

596. Spoken ironically. Adam offers them some refreshment. They reply, that his wine is not good, being too strong ; indeed, so strong that it will not only, like ordinary wine, steal away a man’s brains, but even take them out of his head altogether, so that they lie scattered in his hood. In other words, Adam’s staff breaks their heads, and lets the brains out.

606. 'It is better for us to be there at large.'
609. Lodge says that they 'tooke their way towards the forest of Arden.'
610. 'Then the sheriff found the nest, but no egg (in it).' So also in William of Palerne, l. 83: 'Than fond he nest and no neiȝ for nouȝt nas ther leued'; i. e. for nothing was left there. No neiȝ = non eiȝ, no egg.
616. And loke how he fare, and let us see how he may fare.
618. Here Adam merely expresses disgust of his new mode of life. In Lodge's novel, he begins to faint, being old. Cf. l. 817.
621. Leuer me were, it would be preferable for me.
631. 'After misery comes help.' So in the Proverbs of Hendyng, as said above, in note to l. 32. Trench, in his book On Proverbs, quotes a Hebrew proverb:—When the tale of bricks is doubled, Moses comes.
642. 'Whoso looked aright,' i. e. if one were to look carefully.
651. I. e. I only curse (or blame) myself if I yield.
652. 'Though ye fetched five more, ye would then be only twelve in number.' He means that he would fight twelve of them.
660. In Lodge's novel, the chief is 'Gerismond the lawfull King of France, banished by Torismond, who with a lustie crue of Outlawes lived in that Forrest.' But the present text evidently refers to an English outlaw, such as Robin Hood.
666. 'I will adventure myself as far as the door.' Spoken proverbially, there being no door in the wood. He means that he will venture within sight of the chief. Hadde mete, might have food.
689. 'His peace was made'; i. e. his pardon had been obtained.
698. 'And caused his brother to be indicted.'
700. Wolues-heed, wolf's head. 'This was the ancient Saxon formula of outlawry, and seems to have been literally equivalent to setting the man's head at the same estimate as a wolf's head. In the laws of Edward the Confessor [§ 6], it is said of a person who has fled justice, 'Si postea repertus fuerit et teneri possit, vivus regi reddatur, vel caput ipsius si se defenderit; lupinum enim caput geret a die utlagacionis sue, quod ab Anglis wlueshened nominatur. Et hec sententia communis est de omnibus utlagis.'—Wright. See Thorpe, Ancient Laws, &c., i. 445.
701. Of his men, i. e. (some) of his men.
703. 'How the wind was turned'; i. e. which way the wind blew, as we now say.
704. 'When a man's lands were seized by force or unjustly, the peasantry on the estates were exposed to be plundered and ill-treated by the followers of the intruder.'—Wright.
707. 'The messengers of ill tidings, however innocent themselves, often experienced all the first anger of the person to whom they carried them, in the ages of feudal power. Hence the bearer of ill news generally began by deprecating the wrath of the person addressed.'—Wright. This was not, however, peculiar to those times. Cf. Sophocles, Antigone, 228; 2 Hen. IV. i. 100; Rich. III. iv. 4. 510; Macb. v. 5. 39.

709. 'I.e. has obtained government of the bailiwick. In former times . . . the high sheriff was the officer personally responsible for the peace of his bailiwick, which he maintained by calling out the posse comitatus to assist him.'—Jephson.

710. Doth the crie, causes thee to be proclaimed.

713. 'Greet well my husbands (i.e. servants) and their wives.' The A.S. wif was a neuter substantive, and remained unchanged in the plural, like sheep and deer in modern English. We find wif as a pl. form also in Layamon, l. 1507. The present is a very late example.

714. 'I will (soon) be in the next shire,' i.e. I will soon come to the adjoining county. This expression shows that the author is really laying the scene in England. In venturing into the shire of which his brother was sheriff, Gamelyn was boldly putting himself into his brother's power.

718. 'Put down his hood,' lowered his hood, so as to show his face.

724. Leet take Gamelyn, caused (men) to take Gamelyn; we now say 'caused Gamelyn to be taken,' changing the verb from active to passive. The active use of the verb is universal in such phrases in Middle English, and is still common in German. 'Er liess Gamelyn nehmen.' Cf. l. 733.

727. Ote is not a common name; we find mention of 'Sir Otes de Lile' in Libius Disconius, l. 1103, in the Percy Folio MS., ii. 455.

732. Wonder sorry, wonderfully sorry. Nothing light, in no degree light-hearted.

738. 'May evil befall such another brother (as thou art).'

744. 'I offer to bail him,' lit. I bid for him for bail; mainprise being a sb., and him a dative case. Mr. Jephson says—'I demand that he be granted to me on mainprise, or bail, till the assize for general gaol-delivery.'

752. 'Cause (men) to deliver him at once, and to hand him over to me.'

761. Sit, sits; short for sitteth. Such contractions are common in the 3rd pers. sing. of the pres. indicative. So also stant=standeth, &c. See note to l. 806. In l. 749, sitte means 'may sit.'

779. Cors, curse. He was never cursed by those with whom he had dealings. This can only refer to the poor whom he never oppressed. The author quietly ignores the strong language of the churchmen whom he stripped of everything. This is precisely the tone adopted in the Robin Hood ballads.

785. Fast aboute, busily employed. See l. 240.

786. To hyre the quest, to suborn the jury. See l. 801.

790. Seet, should sit. The A.S. for sat is sæt, but for should sit (3rd pers. sing. of the pt. t. subj.) is sæte. The latter became the M.E. seete; hence sect, by loss of the final e. It rimes with beheet (A.S. behét).

806. Spet, short for speedeth; see note to l. 761.

834. Of, in. So in Shakespeare, Jul. Cæsar, ii. i. 157—'We shall find of him A shrewd contriver.'

840. The quest is oute, the verdict is (already) delivered.

852. The barre, the bar in front of the justice's seat; see ll. 860, 867.

864. 'It seemed a very long time to him.'

871. Sisours, jury-men. I copy the following from my note on P. Plowman, B. 2. 62. 'The exact signification of sisour does not seem quite certain, and perhaps it has not always the same meaning. The Low-Latin name was assissores or assissarii, interpreted by Ducange to mean 'qui a principe vel a domino feudi delegati assisias tenent'; whence Halliwell's explanation of sisour as a person deputed to hold assizes. Compare—

'Pys fals men, þat beyn sysours, þat for hate a trew man wyl endyte,
And a þefe for syluer quyte.'

Robert of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, 1335.

Mr. Furnivall's note says—'Sysour, an inquest-man at assizes. The sisour was really a juror, though differing greatly in functions and in position from what jurymen subsequently became; see Forsyth's Hist. of Trial by Jury.' In the tale of Gamelyn, however, it is pretty clear that 'the twelve sisours that weren of the quest' were simply the twelve gentlemen of the jury, who were hired to give false judgment (l. 786).' Blount, in his Law Dictionary, says of assisors, that 'in Scotland (according to Skene) they are the same with our jurors.' The following stanza from A Poem on the Times of Edw. II., ll. 469-474 (printed in Political Songs, ed. Wright, p. 344) throws some light on the text:—

'And thise assisors, that comen to shire and to hundred,
Damneth men for silver, and that nis no wonder.
For whan the riche justise wol do wrong for mede, Thanne thinketh hem thei muwen the bet, for thei han more nede to winne.

Ac so is al this world ablent, that no man douteth sinne.'

880. 'To swing about with the ropes, and to be dried in the wind.'

881. 'Sorrow may he have who cares for it.' Not an uncommon phrase. In P. Plowman, B. vi. 122, it appears as 'þe deuel haue þat reccheth,' i. e. take him who regrets it.

885. This seems to mean, 'he was rewarded by being hanged by the neck, instead of having a purse hung at his girdle.' Thus Chaucer's Frankeleyn had a silken purse at his girdle.

889. Of the best assise, in the truest court of justice.

900. 'Buried under the earth.'

901. 'No man can escape it.'

GLOSSARIAL INDEX.

The usual contractions occur, such as A. S. = Anglo-Saxon; M. E. = Middle English; F. = French; Icel. = Icelandic (Cleasby and Vigfusson); O. F. = Old French; Prompt. Parv. = Promptorium Parvulorum, ed. Way (Camden Society). For the etymology of words that are still in use, the reader is referred to my Etymological Dictionary, or to the abridgment of it entitled 'A Concise Etymological Dictionary of the English Language.'

The following abbreviations are employed in a special sense: v. = verb in the infinitive mood; pr. s. or pt. s. means the third person singular of the present or past tense indicative, except when 1 or 2 (for first person or second person) is prefixed; similarly, pr. pl. or pt. pl. refers to the third person plural of the same tenses; imp. s. means the second person singular of the imperative mood. The references are to the lines of the Poem.
